いる日本の自己の中の CHATTER

No. 49-Waffles

I received a letter the other day, kindly forwarded to me by this paper, in which I was asked by an enthusiastic "chatter" follower if I had anything to say about waffles. I can assure the young lady that I had just such a thought in mind but neglected saying anything for fear I would never know when to stop and, as you know, I am very much limited as to space. Waffles to my mind, and do you know I can never speak of them without stirring up the pangs of hunger, are symbolical for all things good,

I shall never forget while out on "location" during the niming of a scene from "Her Father's Son," the director gave us an hour for lunch. We had been delayed in "shooting" the scene owing to some unlooked for obstacles and as at happened, we were far out in the woods with no lunch with us at all. We were in quite a quandary until Herbert Standing, who had left the group, returned later announcing the fact that he had discovered habitation. The news had the same effect uponus as the thirsty man who finds an oasis in the desert. We all harried over while Edward Piel acted as spokesman. The occupants of this old lumberman and his wife. from the back of the house announced the fact that the "monarch of the mansion" was about to wreak vengeance upon an innocent chicken, who in turn would get excited and lose its head, but nevertheless after a wait of about fifteen nunutes it was announced that dinner was ready. We all made a mad rush to the dining hall, and when I say mad rush I am not exaggerating one particle. Just think, the dinner consisted of chicken and waffles! And how we did enjoy it! Even Billy Jefferson who claims he doesn't like chicken ate more than his share. I suppose, gentle reader, that you are more anxious to hear how this "dish de resistance" is made than an analytical description of the effect of this wonderful meal upon each individual, therefore, before I run out of space I will begin and tell you how waffles are made.
